Excerpt: .of giant size and great usefulness to the settlers about the Wabash River, and as soon as seeds could be obtained he planted them on his farm. One tree from this planting remains, and is remarkable as being the largest Catalpa speciosa tree in the world which has been planted by human hands. This tree is seen in the center of our illustration. There are other large Catalpa trees in the forest bordering the Wabash River, but these are indigenous and of native growth, while Fayette County is 250 miles from any natural-growth Catalpa trees. From a study of the measurements of all the trees in this grove we find that the Catalpa speciosa has exceeded all others in rate of growth, having increased 1.85 inches girth per annum. In the grove are fifty-four trees remaining, about half having been removed: Three tulip (yellow...
