What they call Aurora, or the dawn, goes before me, that mankind may know my approach. I peep in at your windows with a golden beam of light. Rise with me, I say; for I never shine that healthy men, women and children may sleep daylight away. I am a mighty traveller, and travel without stopping to please or wait for any one. I shine that they may wake, get up, and read, or go to work. I have a crown of glorious radiance around me on every side. I shine over half of the universe; and give half a year of day, for occupation, and half a year of night to rest and sleep in. I give the bright coloring to the fields, the birds, and the trees; for they are all alike in the dark: and I give heat as well as light, and make every nor, not, good--tube, tub, bull, rule--oil, pound--rthin, THis. thing warm. If I did not give heat, all the world would be like the frozen regions about Greenland and Nova Zembla. It would be so cold that all the water would become ice; and the snow and rain would pile up into mountains, and not melt from one year...
