Not illustrated. 1912 Excerpt: .IN DREAMLAND INWEARIEDLY we go a pathless way Through dimly lighted land of dreams to seek Some clearer, wider vision of the day From towering summit of a lonely peak; It is a shadowy land that we behold Half-hidden by dark clouds that trail along Beneath our feet, The middle distance--an enchanted wold--Is over flooded with impassioned song Divinely sweet. We know that we shall never reach again That silent peak beneath the silent skies, That music to recall we know is vain Soon as the morning light unseals our eyes; But there we stand enchanted, listening long To untaught music of a fancied host Of singing birds; Half-conscious that the witchery of song Must with the vanishing of dreams be lost, Unwed to words. MAGIC OF SONG The: song that has been sung so many tunes, Has lived in memory through so many years, Set to a plaintive air in simple rhyme, Falls with its charm of music on the ears And moves the soul to tears. Is it the vibrant sympathetic word That s spoken in a fondly loving tone, Or strain of music once in rapture heard, Stealing its way into the heart alone With magic of its own? Ah, who can tell from what deep-hidden source The tenderest feelings of our nature rise, Or by what channels they will take their course? We only know their silvery current lies Close bordering Paradise. The thoughts that with the simple strain have birth Are...
