CHAPTER II MOSES, THE FOUNDER OF THE NATION After the days of Abraham there elapsed about seven hundred and fifty years before the appearance of Moses. Between Abraham and Moses many generations of men lived among the people of Israel and very few of them were remembered, their names preserved for honor in later days. The Hebrew people, like all other peoples, had few, very few great men. The final test of greatness is never made in a man's life. Men are lightly called great, but when they are dead and gone from sight all but the few rare spirits are quickly forgotten. To all others the test of time has been applied and forgetfulness has passed upon them. This does not mean that they, whose names are forgotten, lived in vain. Far from it. They did their work, whatever it was,...
